WIN a Suzuki DF2.5 outboard at the RYA Dinghy & Watersports Show!

SEAGRASS: VITAL VALUABLE AND VANISHING

Understanding why the hidden habitats are so important and by adopting best practice, such as anchoring and mooring, you can play a big role in securing the biodiversity future of our seas.

What is seagrass?

Seagrasses form a key habitat of the seabed. They are most at risk from damage and are currently classed as a critically endangered species. The habitat that seagrass provides is essential to the marine ecosystem, it acts as a key breeding, feeding and resting ground for a variety of protected species such as seahorses, cuttlefish, stalked jelly fish, as well as rare seaweeds.

Rejuvenation project

The RYA has partnered with Natural England along with other organisations as part of an EU LIFE funded project, known as the LIFE Recreation ReMEDIES Project. The aim of the project is to improve the condition of five at risk seagrass bed habitats on the south coast and to reduce the negative impact of activities on the seabed, such as mooring and anchoring.

Ways you can help

As boat users we can have a positive effect on seagrass beds by making simple changes to our boating practices. One example is using a designated slipway whenever possible to land and launch your boat. This will avoid the hull, your feet and trailer wheels coming into direct contact with sensitive habitats in shallow waters and along the shoreline.

Advanced Mooring Systems (AMS) have been designed to have less impact on the seabed. There are various AMS designs available, with changes often made to the chain or the anchor which are much more 'seabed friendly'.

Avoiding shallow waters and being conscious of low tides will help ensure that your boat avoids coming into contact with or running aground on seabed vegetation. If you do run into seabed vegetation, stop immediately and lift your engine. You should then paddle away until you are clear of the vegetation. You should never use your engine to force your way out as it will damage the habitat and your engine!

Seagrass beds are rapidly declining and are becoming especially scarce in UK waters, but if all water users make a conscious effort to ensure that actions such as anchoring cause as little damage as possible, then there is a chance that we may be able to save this essential habitat.

Get social!

For more information on anchoring best practice, as well as water pollution and boating around wildlife, visit The Green Blue's website: www.thegreenblue.org.uk

DINGHY CRUISING

Discover
your sense of adventure

Cruising is a fantastic low-cost way of using your dinghy with family and friends while exploring the beautiful coastline and inland waters.

And at this year's show we've got plenty of advice and inspiration to help you cast off.

Dinghy cruising trails

Enjoy a day of adventure on the water with RYA Dinghy Trails. Each trail includes local knowledge, distance and safety information as well as fun facts, wildlife spotting, stellar views and even the best picnic spots.

Visit the RYA on stand A10 to pick up a trail and see some examples of dinghies which are perfect for family adventures.

Tips for adventurers

Don't miss Dinghy Cruising Association's Roger Barnes talk about his latest dinghy travel adventures. Steve White from Cody Sailing Club tells us about his dinghy cruising days, family fun and how you can get involved (Exploring by dinghy, Suzuki Main Stage, 12:30).

Over in the Knowledge Zone, RS Sailing's Jake Elsbury will be covering everything you need to know to make your next cruising trip plain sailing. Head over at 15:00 for his Tips for adventurers talk.

Pick up a boat

If you're interested in buying a dinghy to go cruising, the show is packed to the rafters with boats to suit all ages and abilities. Chat to the friendly boat builders and class associations who will be on hand offering all the advice to help you find the boat for you, new or second hand.

Find more information about the RYA Dinghy Trails at www.rya.org.uk/knowledge/dinghy-trails

Show your support for UK para sailing

Para sailing is one of the most inclusive sports globally, offering disabled sailors a level playing field on the water.

Visitors to this year's show will have the chance to pledge their support for sailing to be reinstated in the Paralympic Games by adding their messages alongside some of the most accomplished sailors in the world on the Sailability pledge wall.

Sailing featured in the Paralympic Games for 16 years, between the Sydney 2000 and Rio 2016 Games, but was dropped from the programme in 2015. The messages will be part of the official launch of the RYA Para Sailing Hub, a new support network for the para racing community aimed at increasing racing opportunities for disabled people in the UK, and ultimately for sailing to be reinstated in the Games.

RYA Sailability Manager Joff McGill explains, "The hub will be a chance for the sailing community to join forces and commit to increasing opportunities for para sailors at local, national and international level.

"It will bring together sailors of all ages and experiences and will be a place where they can offer support and learn, making it possible to get to the starting line, wherever they want to race."

Support network

Packed with resources, training opportunities, and advice, the Hub will offer sailors, volunteers, coaches, and supporters a central support structure.

Lucy Hodges, six-time Blind Sailing World Champion, is one of our guest speakers at this year's show and has pledged her support.

"Sailing is a sport I have been able to participate in at all levels. Boat adaptations and communication from my sighted support have enabled me to gain six World titles. I now want to help increase participation to allow sailing to be included at the Paralympics Games again. This hub will allow information to be shared and is a great step forward."

The Para Sailing Hub is championed by the RYA Sailability programme and will build on the success of the #MoreThanSailing campaign, launched in 2018. It aims to break down perceived barriers to participation and provide more opportunities for disabled people to get on the water.

The hub will also provide an opportunity for clubs and classes to unite and demonstrate their united support for World Sailing's #BackTheBid campaign #SailtoLA.

How to get involved

You can write your own message of support on the Sailability pledge wall and chat to the Sailability team throughout the weekend on stand A40.
